Walk 1

Elemore Country Park

Elemore Country Park offers a peaceful escape into nature, where sweeping views and rich biodiversity await at every turn. This former colliery site has been transformed into a haven for walkers, wildlife enthusiasts, and those seeking a breath of fresh air.

The park's gently winding trails meander through wildflower meadows, woodland paths, and open grasslands, culminating in breathtaking panoramic views of Penshaw Monument, Copt Hill, and the beautiful County Durham countryside.

But it's not just the scenery that makes Elemore special—its biodiversity is a quiet triumph. The park is home to a thriving ecosystem, including birds of prey, butterflies, dragonflies, and even roe deer if you're lucky. Native wildflowers bloom in abundance during spring and summer, whilst the woodlands provide important habitat for birds like the Jay and Tawny Owl.

Whether you're after a gentle stroll or a longer looped walk, Elemore's well-maintained 2 miles of trails suit all abilities. It's also a great spot for dog walkers and families, with plenty of open space to explore.

As part of Sunderland's growing green network, Elemore Country Park is a shining example of landscape renewal—with nature and community at its heart.

For those in search of a walk that combines stunning views, rich wildlife, and quiet beauty, Elemore is not to be missed.

Walk 2

Roker to Seaburn

Sunderland is a city by the sea. Along with the River Wear, it is the city's defining natural feature and this walk really does showcase the best of Sunderland's glorious coastline.

Walking here you are virtually guaranteed fantastic coastal views, not least of all the sweeping sands of Whitburn Bay, a place well visited and admired by the artist and painter L.S Lowry in the 1960's. Looking south on a clear day you can see over forty miles down the coast to Whitby and the North York Moors.

This walk is also steeped in history. Look out for Bede's cross, built in 1904 to commemorate local monk and scholar - the Venerable Bede, the man who wrote the first ever history of the English people and created the western calendar we still use today, which included the calculation of Christian holy days, such as Easter.

Weather depending, why not get up close and personal with the recently restored, iconic Roker pier and lighthouse?

This sentinel of the sea has stood watch over the mouth of the river since 1903, a triumph of Victorian Sunderland's hard graft and innovation. Tours of the tunnel and lighthouse can be pre booked at www.rokerpier.co.uk however they are subject to weather conditions on the day.

A gentle walk from Roker to Seaburn and back again, set against the backdrop of the fabulous North Sea coast. This walk offers big skies, grand views, historic buildings and monuments and the chance to tuck into some of the best fish and chips the region has to offer.

Walk 3

City Centre to Roker Marine Walk

This easily accessible walk is packed with culture and history both ancient and modern.

The modern city of Sunderland is founded upon the ancient parishes of Monkwearmouth and Bishopwearmouth. These two parishes, on opposite sides of the river, were joined together for the very first time in 1796 by the building of the first Wearmouth Bridge - a key moment in the history of Sunderland.

Our current bridge dates from 1927 and this walk will give you the perfect chance for a close-up inspection. The view from the middle is tremendous – whilst there why not take a quick selfie with the city's coat of arms? Nil Desperandum!

Beyond the bridge the walk becomes more tranquil as you move away from the buzz of the city centre and down along St Peter's riverside. Here you will pass by modern university buildings, the National Glass Centre and the sites of Sunderland's ship building heyday, commemorated now by a fantastic sculpture trail which adds something a little bit different to your journey down towards the sea.

The 7th century St Peter's Church is also a must visit. Pop in to see one of the country's most historic sites, once one of the greatest centres of learning in the northern world and home to the world-famous monk and scholar, the Venerable Bede.

Walk 4

Penshaw Monument

Based on the Temple of Hephaestus in Athens, for many residents the monument is quite simply a symbol of home.

This is a very short walk but don't be fooled, a hike up to the Monument is guaranteed to get the legs burning and the heart beating that little bit faster but the end result is well and truly worth it.

At 136m high, this is one of Sunderland's highest points and as you might expect, the views are superb. Durham Cathedral, the Cheviot Hills, Pontop Pike, are all visible from here.

See map
on page 27

The site is managed by the National Trust and during the summer months, for a small fee, visitors can climb up a very steep set of steps within one of the columns to the top of the Monument itself. If you thought the views were good from the bottom, just wait until you get to the top! So why not bring a flask and snack, stay a while and enjoy the view.

Built in the 1840's in honour of the Earl of Durham, Penshaw Monument is perhaps Sunderland's most iconic landmark and a 'must see' for anyone visiting or living in the city.

0.5 miles

Ability level:
A short walk with a tough ascent of Penshaw Hill. Not suitable for wheelchair users or pushchairs.

Cox Green River Walk

These industries have long since gone, nature has returned and this walk offers an excellent chance to explore the lush green riverside around Cox Green and Fatfield before taking in the lovely open countryside near Offerton.

It is a quiet, peaceful area, far removed from the hustle and bustle of Sunderland's busy city centre, where the river meanders slowly through the landscape down towards the North Sea. Full of wildlife, keep your eyes peeled for otters on the river, while sparrowhawks and buzzards swoop above the fields and along the hedgerows.

Perhaps the most surprising discovery along this walk is the Victoria Viaduct. Hidden amongst the woodland, this impressive stone structure is one of nine bridges that cross the river in Sunderland.

Built to carry rail traffic over the Wear, it was the main rail line from the North East to London until 1872. Named after Queen Victoria, the final stone of this bridge was laid on her Coronation Day, 28 June 1838. Don't delay, get down to the river and see this Victorian marvel for yourself.

Hendon Beach to Ryhope Dene

This rugged coastline forms part of the Durham Heritage Coast, which is itself part of the England Coast Path, a national trail that encompasses the whole of England.

Hendon and Ryhope offer a wilder, more untouched experience, where natural cliffs and coastal wildlife make for excellent exploring and photography.

An unusual feature of this coastline is its geology. We all know that the North East of England sits on a rich bed of coal, it's played a crucial role in the history of the region but let's not forget the magnesian limestone rock that lies on top of that coal.

It was formed over 200 million years ago and has resulted in great swathes of rare coastal grassland which are home to a unique mix of plants and insects, so get your walking shoes on and see this special place for yourself.

Top tip - this is an outstanding place to watch the sun rise over the sea, especially during the months of December and January - just remember to wrap up warm.

This is a 'there and back' walk along Sunderland's most dramatic stretch of coastline. With bracing sea air, crashing waves and outstanding views looking south and out to sea, what more could you ask for?

Walk 7

Rainton Meadow

Owned and managed by the Durham Wildlife Trust, the reserve comprises a rich mosaic of wetlands and lakes, grasslands and woodlands and can be explored easily along an excellent network of accessible pathways.

The reserve is home to a small herd of Exmoor ponies and rare breed cattle. These tough and hardy beasts act as nature's lawnmowers, grazing the land and helping to maintain the reserve's beautiful wildflower meadows.

Bursting with wildlife, you might like to bring your binoculars and keep a look out for the reserve's dynamic duo, the stoat and the weasel which are regularly seen along the tracks and footpaths.

See map

There's a fully accessible bird feeding station too, which offers a great opportunity to witness a whole host of birdlife including the stunningly beautiful bullfinch.

Don't forget there's also a welcoming visitor centre and café on site to purchase tasty treats to replenish you after a day's exploring.

A former colliery site, Rainton Meadows is now one of the most significant areas for wildlife in Sunderland.

Barnes Park

Thanks to the booming coal trade the town grew, the population exploded and by the 19th century Sunderland had emerged as an industrial powerhouse.

It was during this time that many of the city's parks were created. Industry had meant that many people were living in cramped and polluted living conditions, but the local authorities responded with gusto, creating new parks to help beautify and civilise Sunderland's urban landscape - and what a good job they did too!

This much-loved park has been enjoyed by the people of Sunderland as a recreational space since 1909. A leafy green oasis that offers a fully accessible network of paths, Barnes Park is a great place to visit and if you are a resident of Sunderland it's right on your doorstep.

Perhaps the parks' most quirky feature is a 17th century cannon, used during the English Civil War. See if you can find out where it is!

The park caters well for visitors with excellent parking, a beautiful sensory garden, children's play area and a very popular and busy café to serve refreshments.

Sunderland was once little more than a scattering of sparsely populated rural settlements and fishing hamlets.

Walk 9

Tunstall Hills

This is another one of Sunderland's highest points, over 100m above sea level and offering stunning panoramic views over the whole city. From here just about every local landmark is visible - see how many you can make out.

The hills themselves are the remains of a huge barrier reef that once existed here millions of years ago. Once again formed of that ever present magnesian limestone, they have been designated as a Site of Special Scientific Interest and are home to a unique mixture of flowers and grasses. Visit from late May to July to see a stunning display of orchids. Over the years the hills have been used as farmland and not surprisingly have been home to numerous limestone quarries and kilns.

From the 17th century the lime industry was a key part of Sunderland's economy.

Lime was an extremely useful and versatile substance being used in agriculture to improve soil quality and in the construction of buildings, walls and plastering.

"Come, let's away to Tunstall Hill, in twenty minutes we'll be there, and on top we'll get our fill, of the pure bracing country air."
So said William Brockie the editor of local newspaper, The Sunderland Times, back in the 19th century.

Walk 10

South Hylton to Claxheugh Rock

This is a short linear route, walking back through history past the sites of former gas works, shipyards and paper mills, now long since gone and hardly visible beneath the riverside vegetation.

The walk heads east towards the often forgotten Claxheugh Rock, an impressive rocky outcrop that was formed over 200 million years ago when dinosaurs roamed the earth. It is another great example of Sunderland's magnesian limestone geological makeup.

Top tip - the footpath that runs up the eastern side of Claxheugh gives a fantastic view of the Northern Spire.

Keep an eye on the river for what must be one of Sunderland's most unusual features - the Cretehawser. For most people a concrete boat doesn't make any sense! But here in Sunderland we have a strong tradition of creative thinking and a 'can do' attitude and just after the First World War, due to a steel shortage, several concrete tugs were built on the Wear.

The Cretehawser is the only one that remains. After it was damaged during an air raid in the Second World War, it was towed upriver for safety and has been there ever since, a permanently unusual feature of this part of the city.
